

Anyone who's read Andrew's satirical (and often quite surreal) 'Legal Eagle' column in Concept For Living will already be familiar with his inimitable style. If you're curious about Seductive Amoebae, here's a taster of what to expect.

Set in an anonymous modern day city... a canyon of buildings and billboards and streets and stores...Seductive Amoebae follows the demise of Thomas Paul...handsome, wealthy and successful...indulging in the excesses that engulf and suffocate him...

It is discovered that Thomas Paul's wife has taken part in a pilot study for a new fertility drug...she dies giving birth to a horribly disfigured child...

Paul discovers the drug was issued due to pressure from Filodade...the corporation that created the drug to achieve a launch date...Politicians and government scientists have, it transpires, a commercial interest in Filodade. The drug is introduced in a media whirl...despite warnings that it isn't ready for public consumption...

Embarking on what he perceives to be a campaign of natural retribution against Filodade and ultimately against society... the paths of Paul...his daughter...and the CEO of Filodade...Edward Mansfield... inadvertently cross and entangle... culminating in a chaotic...violent... deprived...frenzied and disturbing finale.

Acclaim from the publisher:

"Bleak and menacing... contrived and paradoxical... Seductive Amoebae is a brilliant... dark... disturbing... and incisive dissection of the modern world..."

"Unconventional... kaleidoscopic and hallucinogenic... Seductive Amoebae is a dark parody of the disintegration of a society obsessed with... television... beauty... sex... fame... and celebrity..."

The Legal Eagle Has Landed

Concept For Living's legal eagle Andrew Foley Jones is this Spring launching his first book, Seductive Amoebae. Set in an anonymous modern day city, the novel tells of the demise of Thomas Paul following the tragic death of his wife.

St Asaph-born solicitor Andrew Foley Jones is a bit of a multi-tasker. If he's not strutting his legal stuff throughout North Wales and the North West for law firm Mackenzie Jones (in which he is a partner), he's running around playing sports or painting canvasses in his Chester home. As if all that wasn't enough, he's now revealed that he's been writing a novel, Seductive Amoebae, during the small hours while the rest of us were fast asleep.

The book began as a collection of short stories when Andrew was studying Law at the University of Liverpool. Developing his ideas during travels throughout North America, Greece and Asia, he eventually realised there was a potential novel to be found in his handwritten manuscript.

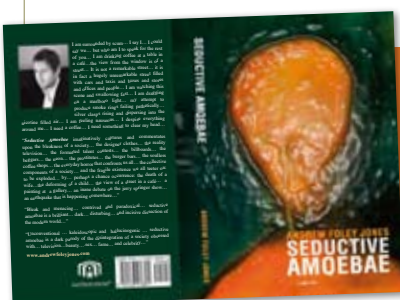

Studying law and training as a solicitor interrupted Andrew's writing but, keen to pursue his ambition of completing the novel, he found the solution in rising early and writing from 5am till 7am.

Keen also to pursue a legal career, Andrew put the novel on hold and was made a partner at just 29. The break from writing was short-lived, however, and he was soon back to his secretive early morning pre-work routine; something none of his peers were aware of.

Much of the final writing of Seductive Amoebae was done at Andrew's Chester home and during travels throughout Europe and Asia, and the book was finally completed at the end of 2008.

Seductive Amoebae can be purchased at all good book stores and a first edition signed by the author can be ordered online at: www.andrewfoleyjones.com

We have a signed copy of Seductive Amoebae to give away. To be in with a chance of winning the book, simply send your name, address and daytime contact number to: competitions@conceptforliving.co.uk, typing Seductive Amoebae Competition in the subject box. Alternatively, post your details to: Seductive Amoebae Competition, Concept For Living, The Old School, Higher Kinnerton, Chester, CH4 9AJ. The closing date for entries is Friday 17th April 2009.